The appearance on the scene of the scason's debutantes is expected to work wonders in the way of enlivening the season. The first of these blessomings is announced for this week, and others will follow rapidly until half a dozen full-blown flowers will stand where buds existed incomplete before The annual reinforcement of the ranks by young, eager and energetic girls is like the infusion of new blood into wearied veins. The toiler on the social treadmill faint and hungry for novelty, welcomes the change with unmixed delight; and as for the buds themselves, they are, for a season or two at least, indefatigable in the pursult

A much vexed question in connection ith the season of late suppers is whether the most serviceable and altogether de-sirable product of the chafing dish shall be denominated a "rabbit" or a "rarebit." It certainly is rare, at least in its perfection, and a bit goes a long way, if the compound and a bit goes a long way, if the compound chances to get stringy in inexperienced hands. But the better name for it seems to be "rabbit," for it has (or should have) a gamey flavor, and is (or should be) as nutritious as meat. Moreover, if you go a step further and put a possible of the firm of Wolfe step further and put a possible of the firm of Wolfe. step further and put a poached egg on top of it, you mount up in the animal kingdom and have a Golden Buck. And if you desire to impart an ornithological flavor to your cookery you can make a Scotch Woodcock on somewhat similar lines.

This last is really a good thing and should be pushed along into more households than now enjoy it. Its proper compilation needs a fendaces for and the actual possession of some of those delectable little fish called anchovies, but, as these are to be had at any well regulated grocery store, either whole, in oil, or mashed conveniently into paste, there need be no difficulty about that part of it. Of course if you or your friends don't like them there is no more to be said. But if there is one thing more certain than another it is that a taste which dislikes good food s a very awkward adjunct to the manipula tion of a chafing dish. The next time you are caught with a bottle of anchovies and some unexpected friends on your hands in-troduce yourself and the others to a Scotch Woodcock and see if there is enough to supply the demand.

Have about four slices of bread trimmed of the crust and nicely toasted. Then cut it so that when it is piled up it will be in the form of a pyramid, with steps up on all four sides. Now butter it on both sides and spread a dozen chopped anchovics between the slices.
